HISTORY

In 1838, the first railroad station west of Savannah was named for Robert William Pooler and his dedicated efforts on the Central Georgia Railroad. Over the decades, the station would become a site of countless historic happenings: a meeting place for Union officers, the campsite of General William T. Sherman and his troops before their siege of Savannah, and the site of Mr. Ben Rothwell's new method of community development, which led to Pooler's incorporation in 1907.

Over a century later, Pooler has grown into a thriving destination just off the Georgia coast, offering travelers exceptional dining, shopping and lodging experiences just miles away from Georgia's most stunning views and desirable attractions.

NATIONAL MUSEUM OF THE MIGHTY EIGHTH AIR FORCE

In January of 1942, in Savannah, Georgia, the United States Army Air Corps, assigned seven men, without a single aircraft, to a newly formed Eighth Air Force. The Mighty Eighth went on to become the largest air armada in the world and paved the way for the D-Day invasion.
